Have you always lived where you live now?

Previous to living in the suburbs of Melbourne, I lived by the sea on the Mornington Peninsula for thirty five years with my family.

What are you most proud of accomplishing so far in your life?

Living positively and influencing my children in the same way. Watching them grow into adults and automatically using these positive tools to enhance their own lives.

When and why did you begin writing?

My first published work was when I was six. It was a piece called “A Day in the Life of a Dollar Note.” It was published in the school newsletter. I remember being really excited about it. I recall that it was because our Australian currency had changed from Pounds to a Decimal currency.

Who or what influenced your writing once you began?

My influences and inspiration comes directly from my adult children. They have supported and encouraged me right from the very beginning.

What do you find most challenging about writing in general?

The most challenging thing by far for me is keeping my thoughts focused on the piece I am writing. I have so many different pieces currently being worked on, that I am chewing at the bit to get into.

How did you come up with your title?

That is an easy question. All I had to do was meditate and I asked for the title to be given to me.

Is there a message in your chapter that you want your readers to grasp?

My message is purely the same as the title, ‘Believe.’ For all that you feel, believe; for all that you hear, believe; and all that you see, believe; just believe.

Can we expect any new writing from you in the future?

Yes, I have been working on a couple of stories for children and young adults which I hope to have published soon. I’ve also written a true life story “A Kink in my Armour” which I’d like to turn into a movie and this is currently in the hands of an Agent.

Where do you see yourself in five years?

I'd like to be earning a good living from writing as a sought after author - someone who people can aspire to and read, knowing they can take that leap of faith to begin their own journey.

Do you have any last thoughts that you wish to share with your readers?

Live your dreams and breathe them like they are your reality. Feel them in your heart with every breath you take. Once you do this, you will truly see them as they do become real. Believe.
